

It's never easy to say goodbye. Coming to terms with the idea that a beloved pet is nearing the end of their journey through life is hard. They may have been a constant and devoted companion for many years or perhaps grew up with the children as part of the family. We understand you will miss them as much as you would a close friend or even a family member.

The loss of a loved pet

Probably most of us hope our cat will pass away quietly in their sleep. However, death by natural causes may be drawn out and cause the cat pain and distress. It is the quality of your cat's life that is so important when making a decision whether or not to put them to sleep. No one should feel guilty about choosing euthanasia for their pet when the time comes. It is a kind and considerate final act of a caring owner.

The procedure of euthanasia can be done in the consulting room or at your home. Your veterinary practice will provide a room which is quiet, peaceful and comfortable if you prefer to use it. Your cat will have a little hair cut from a foreleg and a veterinary nurse will assist the vet in holding the leg. The anaesthetic overdose will be given by injection into a vein in the leg (just as it is when your pet receives an anaesthetic). They will peacefully fall asleep. You can at all times stroke or cuddle your cat so they know you're with them at the end. If you prefer not to be present, a veterinary nurse will give them the comfort and cuddles for you.

If you choose, your beloved pet can be buried at home or your veterinary practice can arrange the cremation for you. We use a respected pet crematorium and the ashes can be returned if you so wish.

As pet owners, your veterinary practice understand how painful and hard it may be to decide to have your old companion put to sleep. Please don't hesitate to talk to a member of staff about any concerns you may have.
